

New York City Law Enforcement Exploring

Fact Sheet

Overview

Law Enforcement Exploring is a community service, career-oriented program designed to educate young men and women, ages 14-20, about Law Enforcement. At the end of the year 2016, there were over 4,500 young people in the program here in New York City.

Role of Law Enforcement Agencies

Law Enforcement Exploring is a collaborative effort of several agencies, both local and federal. These agencies include the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Drug Enforcement Administration, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, New York City Police Department, MTA Police, AMTRAK Police, HSI, ATF&E, U.S. Secret Service, US Marshals Service and NYC DOC. These agencies sponsor programs, participate in the Law Enforcement Academy or make their personnel and facilities available for training.

Goals

Exploring reaches out to New York's youth in all of its diverse neighborhoods to help break down barriers between young adults and law enforcement officials. Explorers are taught the importance of higher education, self-discipline in reaching their goals, and are encouraged to see law enforcement as an attainable and attractive career choice.

Methods

Exploring relies on three primary methods to attain its goals: youth leadership, positive adult role models, and five experience areas.

- Youth Leadership. The Explorers elect their own officers and plan and execute most of their program activities. This encourages Explorers to see how their self-discipline can help or hurt the group.
- Positive Adult Role Models. The positive interaction of Explorers and Law Enforcement Officers helps young adults see officers as real people and break down the negative stereotypes they often associate with Law Enforcement.
- Five Experience Areas. Exploring feels that an appreciation and commitment to the following areas is crucial to the development of all young people: Career, Life Skills, Service Learning, Character Education, and Leadership Experience.
